

“Sounds Have Colors” – Live Show by Friends of Osho

That sounds have colors was proved by the gorgeous multimedia presentation of music, dance and painting in the Multiversity Plaza. The show was based on the Osho insight that there is a correspondence between sound and color – because sound is nothing but vibrations of electricity. That electricity is light, and when a ray of light is broken through a prism, it becomes seven colors. Avinash the expert violinist played his compositions in various ragas along with djembe, conga, electric guitar and keyboard with great elan. Mahesh Vinayakram the celebrated singer of Karnatak music raised the tempo of the music by his powerful singing. What added glitter and glamour to the show was the innovative painting on the floor by Vartan while three beautiful dancers swirled and whirled around him like mermaids. The audience was perplexed, where to look, or what to hear, their senses flooded with so much beauty and melody. The blend of sound and color was like an old mature wine: intoxicating. Now we know why Osho called these artistes, “Friends of Osho.”

OSHO

© 2015 OSHO International
Copyright & Trademark Information